The Coming Year.

The coming year will be a good one financially, despite almost anything the democrats can do.

From our standpoint it seems perfectly apparent that it would have been much better if the republican policy could have been assured by the re-election of Benjamin Harrison; but even free trade will not be able to keep a large volume of money from circulation in this country during the coming winter months.

To begin with there will, at small estimate, be 500,000 people coming to this country to attend the World's fair.

These 500,000 people will at a conservative estimate spend $400 apiece in this country. That will make the vast sum of $200,000,000.

Second, there will be 100,000 wealthy Americans who usually take a vacation trip in Europe and spend $1,000 apiece who will next year remain at home and attend the Columbian exposition and spend their money, aggregating $100,000,000, at home.

Third, there will be a vast amount spent by exhibitors from abroad in various ways to railroads and to one and another American enterprises.

A conservative estimate of all this will give America such a boom as it has not seen in a generation.

If besides all this the crops should be fairly good there will be good times and plenty of money in circulation.—Cleveland World.

Scandal.

A woman to the holy father went, Confession of sin was her intent; And so her misdeeds, great and small, She faithfully rehearsed them all.

And chiefest in her catalogue of sin, She owned that she a tale-bearer had been, And borne a bit of scandal up and down To all the long-tongued gossips in the town.

The holy father of her other sin, Granted the absolution asked of him, But while for all the rest he pardon gave, He told her this offense was very grave.

And that to do it penance she must go Out by the wayside where the thistles grow And gather the largest, ripest one, Scatter the seeds, and that when this was done, To tell him his commands she did obey.

She must come back again another day, The woman thinking this a penance light, Hastened to do it with a penance light.

Feeling right glad she had escaped so well, Next day but one she went the priest to tell: The priest sat still and heard her story through, Then said, "There's something still for you to do."

Those little thistle seeds that you have sown, I bid you regather every one."

The woman said, "But father, 'twould be vain To try and gather up those seeds again; The wind hath scattered them both far and wide."

Over the meadows, vale, and mountain side," The father answered, "Now, I hope from this The lesson I have taught you will not miss, You cannot gather back the scattered seeds, Which far and wide will grow to noxious weeds, Nor can the mischief one by scandal sown By any person be again undone."—Exchange.
